Would you can Hitler a prophet of the Devil because Nostradamus called him the 2nd Anti-Christ

Nostradamus is widely interpreted by some as having predicted Adolf Hitler's rise and labeled him the "second Antichrist" in his prophecies[1] [2] [3]. This interpretation comes from several quatrains that mention a figure called "Hister," which some believe is a cryptic reference to Hitler, though "Hister" is also an old name for the Danube River near where Hitler was born[4] [5] [1] [2]. Nostradamus described this figure as a charismatic leader from Western Europe whose fame would spread to the East and who would bring great destruction—descriptions that many feel fit Hitler's biography and actions[1] [2].

However, Nostradamus did not explicitly call Hitler a "prophet of the Devil." The term "Antichrist" in Nostradamus' writings is associated with figures who bring massive suffering and evil, but the texts are vague and open to interpretation[4] [2] [3]. The idea of Hitler as the "second Antichrist" is a modern reading of Nostradamus' ambiguous verses, not a direct statement from Nostradamus himself. The connection between "Antichrist" and "prophet of the Devil" is interpretive and not rooted in Nostradamus' actual language—he saw these figures as bringers of catastrophe, not necessarily as prophets in a religious sense[4] [2] [3].

In summary:

- Nostradamus is thought by some to have predicted Hitler as the "second Antichrist," a bringer of destruction[1] [2] [3].
- He did not call Hitler a "prophet of the Devil"; that is a modern interpretation, not a direct quote or clear implication from Nostradamus' writings[4] [2].
- Nostradamus' prophecies are highly ambiguous, and their meaning is debated and often retrofitted to historical events[4] [6] [2].

So, while Nostradamus is popularly linked to the idea of Hitler as an "Antichrist," the label "prophet of the Devil" is not found in his texts and is an interpretive leap rather than a documented claim.

Was Hitler rich?

Adolf Hitler became extremely wealthy during his time as the leader of Nazi Germany. Although he came from a background of poverty, by the time he rose to power, he amassed a fortune through several sources:

- Book royalties: Hitler's book Mein Kampf became a major source of income, especially after he made it a required gift for newlywed couples in Germany. By the end of World War II, nearly 10 million copies had been sold or distributed, earning him millions of Reichsmarks—equivalent to over $150 million in today's dollars[7] [8] [9].
- Government salaries and perks: As Chancellor and later Führer, Hitler received official salaries and had access to discretionary funds set aside in the state budget for his personal use[10] [11].
- Corporate donations and royalties: Hitler received substantial payments and "donations" from German corporations and wealthy supporters, totaling hundreds of millions of Reichsmarks—some estimates suggest the equivalent of several billion dollars today[12] [13] [9].
- Tax exemption: Upon consolidating power, Hitler declared himself exempt from paying taxes, further increasing his net wealth[13] [8] [9].
- Lavish properties and assets: He used his wealth to acquire and renovate multiple luxury residences, including the Berghof estate in Bavaria and an apartment in Munich, and amassed an extensive art collection[7] [8] [9].

At the peak of his power, estimates of Hitler's net worth range from $150 million to several billion dollars in today's money, making him one of the richest men of his era[12] [7] [9].

Hitler's taste in women becaus,even ,hr had a job?

Adolf Hitler’s taste in women was shaped by his desire for dominance and control, as well as his preference for much younger, impressionable partners. He was attracted to women who were significantly younger than himself—Maria Reiter was 21 years his junior, Geli Raubal 19 years younger, and Eva Braun 23 years younger[14] [15] [16]. Hitler reportedly believed that younger women were “as malleable as wax” and could be easily shaped to his will, stating that a man should be able to “stamp his own imprint on her”[15].

He preferred women who would not challenge him intellectually or interfere with his work, seeking companions who were obedient and would not distract him from his political mission[14] [15] [16]. This pattern is evident in his long-term relationship with Eva Braun, who was described as pleasant and undemanding, and whose presence was largely kept secret to maintain Hitler’s public image as a celibate, self-sacrificing leader[14] [16].

Despite his powerful position, Hitler’s relationships were often troubled. Several women he was involved with attempted suicide, and at least two succeeded (Geli Raubal and Eva Braun)[14] [17]. His relationships were marked by secrecy, control, and emotional distance, reflecting his need for dominance and his avoidance of emotional vulnerability[14] [15] [16].

In summary, Hitler’s taste in women was characterized by a preference for much younger, submissive partners whom he could control, and he avoided relationships with assertive or independent women[14] [15] [16].
